

Salvia spathacea 'Powerline Pink'

Powerline Pink Pitcher Sage

Spreading shrub
Sun or part shade
Moderate water
Origin: California

Powerline Pink is not pink at all but blooms with stout spikes of crimson flowers. Tall stems reach two feet high and hold the blooms into the spring and fall. This California native can take summer drought but is best with occasional water. Cut back old flower stems to keep the plants dense and neat. Use in woodland and riparian settings or natural border. It spreads slowly by underground runners to form a clump several feet wide.
